Some people have suggested that rather than paying out-of-work welfare benefits into people's bank accounts or by giro, they should be paid on a chargecard that cannot be used on non-essentials like cigarettes or alcohol

Which of the following best reflects your view?

Out-of-work benefit payments should continue to be paid by giro or into bank accounts, people should be trusted to make their own decisions on how to spend their money

Out-of-work benefit payments should be paid on a chargecard so that people can only spend it on essentials, not on things like tobacco or alcohol
