According to official statistics, around 2.3 million people living in Britain are immigrants from the rest of the European Union. How many of them do you think are currently claiming the main unemployment benefit, the Job seekers Allowance? If you are not sure, please give your best guess.

Still on the subject of immigrants and Britain's welfare system; for anyone to claim such welfare benefits as Job Seekers Allowance, incapacity benefit or income support, they must first register for national insurance and get a national insurance number. What proportion of immigrants these days do you think claim one of these benefits within six months of obtaining a national insurance number? Again, if you are not sure, please give your best guess.
