Some people have called for government ministers and senior MPs to release their full tax returns so that the public can see how much they earn and what taxes they pay. Other people think that MPs already have to publicly declare their earnings, and making them release their detailed tax returns would be too much of an invasion of privacy.

Do you think each of the following should or should not have to publicly release their tax returns?

Some people have said that to be properly transparent ministers' wives and partners should also release their tax returns, so people can see the income and tax paid by their whole household. Other people think that ministers' wives and partners are not politicians and should be able to keep their income and taxes private.

Do you think government ministers should have to release the tax returns of their wives and partners?

Changes have been proposed to building regulations to make houses more environmentally friendly. It has been suggested that if people want to improve their house, such as by building an extension, adding a conservatory or fitting a new boiler, they should also have to make their house more energy efficient, such as by adding loft or wall insulation.

Would you support or oppose these new requirements?

This May many British cities will vote on whether or not to have directly elected mayors. These mayors would replace council leaders, but will be elected directly by the public, rather than by local councillors. There are already elected mayors in some towns and cities, such as London, Middlesbrough, Hartlepool, Watford and Doncaster.
