In order to stand as leader of the Labour party candidates need to be nominated by 33 MPs. So far only Ed Balls, Ed Miliband and David Miliband have got enough nominations to stand. Some of the other candidates have appealed to the Labour party's ruling NEC to relax the nomination process to allow all the candidates to stand even if they don't have enough nominations. Which of the following best reflects your view?

The Labour party should allow all the candidates to stand to give members the widest possible choice	38	37	41	41	42	35	36	40	37	38	39	41	37	39	35	44
The Labour party should only allow candidates with enough nominations to stand - if a candidate cannot get the support of 33 MPs they could not possibly be an effective leader	46	47	50	44	44	48	43	45	51	50	42	39	48	47	49	43
