Currently squatting is not a criminal offence in England, providing there is no evidence of forced entry. Some have called on the law to be changed, making squatting a criminal offence. They point out that the squatters are entering the premises without the permission of the owner, making it difficult and time-consuming for landlords to remove them from their property. Others argue that it is better to put an empty property to good use highlighting that the landlords are able to remove the squatters once they have been discovered.

Do you think the law should be changed making squatting a criminal offence or should it be left as it currently is?
