Abdelbasset Ali al-Megrahi was convicted for the Lockerbie bombings in 1988. He was sentenced to a life sentence of at least 27 years following his 2001 conviction for the bombing.

It was announced in 2009 that Abdelbasset Ali al-Megrahi would be released on compassionate grounds, in view of his diagnosis of advanced prostate cancer. He was subsequently flown back to his home country of Libya. Abdelbasset al-Megrahi is still alive in Libya, but is reported to be semi-comatose and close to death.

Do you think the transitional government in Libya should or should not return Abdelbasset Ali al-Megrahi to Britain to serve the rest of his sentence?

Some people have suggested that banks should be made to separate their investment banking operations (that is raising capital for companies, underwriting and trading shares and securities) and their retail banking operations (that is, providing bank accounts and loans for customers and businesses).

Some people think this would help protect retail banking from the riskier investment banking in the event of another banking crisis. Other people think it would damage British banks and risk making them relocate to other countries.

Would you support or oppose rules separating retail and investment banking?

Since 2010 the International Association of Athletics Federations has adopted zero tolerance rules for false starts in top-level athletics competitions, meaning any athlete responsible for a false start is immediately disqualified for the race. Previously one false start had been accepted, and competitors were only disqualified if there was a second false start in the same race.

Do you think competitors should be disqualified after a single false start, or should they only be disqualified after a second false start in the same race?
